
University of Pennsylvania

Institute for Environmental Studies

presents

Marshall Becker

West Chester University of Pennsylvania

The Lenape ["Delaware"]:
How They Lived and Where They've Gone

Before European settlement, northern Delaware, eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey and parts of New York were occupied by several distinct native nations who were renamed the "Delaware" in the late colonial period. The Lenape of southeastern Pennsylvania were a foraging society primarily dependent on anadromous fish. Archaeological studies at Lenape and related sites, and in particular at the Montgomery Site (36CH60) and the Printzhof (36DE3), tell us much about how the Lenape lived before the Europeans came, and how their lives were altered by contact. Historic records about the lives of these fascinating Americans and how they responded to European immigration provide us with a rich understanding of both their history and our own.

Date: October 27, 2004
Time: NOON - 1:30 pm
Place: Carolyn Hoff Lynch Auditorium
On the Penn campus: Chemistry Building:
34th & Spruce St (enter on 34th St)

Co-sponsor:

*The University of Pennsylvania
Museum of Archaeology and Anthropology*

NO REGISTRATION REQUIRED

Direct questions to: 215-573-3164

ies_penn@sas.upenn.edu

<http://www.sas.upenn.edu/earth/ies>

NO FOOD OR DRINK PERMITTED IN THE AUDITORIUM
