When is war justified? What kind of conflict, exactly, counts as war? Questions about this terrible yet timeless force in human life are especially pressing and perplexing as we observe war and conflict around the globe. In this critical speaking course, we will wrestle with these questions through philosophical and media analysis of specific wars, while developing oral presentation skills through debates, individual speeches, and collaborative presentations.