Description:
Islamic law, the sacred law of Islam grounded in the Qur’ān, the practice of the Prophet Muḥammad, and the writings of Muslim scholars and jurists, stretches back nearly 1500 years. In this course, we will explore various aspects of Islamic law as seen through the eyes of one of the great minds of the Middle Ages, Ibn Rushd (known to the West as Averroës, d. 1196). Based on readings from Ibn Rushd’s handbook of Islamic law, The Distinguished Jurist’s Primer (Bidāyat al-mujtahid), and other texts, this course will examine Islamic legal doctrine relating to criminal and penal law, ritual purity, dietary rules, family law, commercial law, and the law of war. Additional readings will deal with the role of the Qur’ān in early Islamic law, gender, Muslim feminism and the law, and some contemporary Muslim responses to the Islamic legal tradition.

Students will learn the main outlines of the history of Islamic law, its major concepts, and selected areas of legal doctrine. Comparative analyses of legal doctrines will also serve to introduce students to some general legal concepts.

No previous background in Arabic or Islamic studies is required for this course.

Course Requirements:
This course is run in a seminar format. This means that it is vital and imperative that students read carefully, and complete, all assigned texts on time, as well as participate fully and vigorously in class discussion. Class preparedness will count significantly towards final grades; absences will count against final grades. Students will be expected to outline or respond in writing to a number of the readings, or produce short response papers (at the instructor’s direction), and may also be required make occasional short in-class presentations related to the readings. In addition, students will write an approximately 10-page paper analyzing a fatwā (formal legal opinion by a Muslim jurist) and take a final exam.

Grading:
Grades will be based on a combination of class participation (including attendance and preparation), assignments (quality and timeliness of submission), the research paper (timeliness of submission and thoughtfulness of analysis), and the final exam (accuracy, thoughtfulness of answers, demonstration of engagement with the material).

Required Texts:
There are three required texts for this class. The texts, available from the Penn Book Center (34th and Sansom), are Jamal Elias, Islam, Religions of the World (Saddle River: Prentice Hall, 1999); Knut S. Vikør, Between God and the Sultan (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2005); and Wael B. Hallaq, An Introduction to Islamic Law (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2009). Additional readings are available on the course Blackboard site.
